A lifelong resident of Reno, Matt joined McDonald Carano in 1989 as a law clerk, became an Associate in 1991 and a Partner in 1998, and has been serving as Managing Partner of the Reno office since 2018. He is Chair of the Construction Law & Litigation Practice and also has a substantial commercial and complex litigation practice. Matt serves the community as Judge Pro Tem for the Reno Municipal Court and an appointed member of the Board of Directors of the Washoe County Sheriff's Honorary Deputies Association. He is also an active supporter of the Nevada Military Support Alliance, Northern Nevada Children's Cancer Foundation, Ronald McDonald House Charities of Northern Nevada, and Nevada Women's Fund.

Construction Law & Litigation

Matt's comprehensive construction law experience encompasses dispute resolution (arbitration, mediation, litigation, pre-litigation counseling on troubled projects); project planning and advice (selection of project delivery method, bidding strategy and process); contracts and contracting (plan, structure, draft, negotiate construction contract documents); and project execution (compliance, permitting, insurance, bonding, performance, payment). He also serves as an Administrative Law Judge for the Nevada State Contractors Board, which requires him to review and interpret construction contracts and statutes of all types.

Matt's clients primarily include contractors, subcontractors, material suppliers, engineers, owners, and developers. He has handled claims of all types, including design and construction defects, work performance and quality, changed or unforeseen conditions, delays, disruptions, loss of productivity, acceleration, payment disputes, back charges, and bid protests and disputes. Matt provides realistic assessments of entitlement issues, damages, litigation costs, litigation risks and settlement options.

Commercial & Complex Litigation

Construction projects and disputes are complex and document intensive, involve multiple parties and substantial amounts of money, and have critical timelines – which are also the core components of Matt's commercial and complex litigation practice. His substantial and diverse commercial litigation background was built primarily by defending major business entities against allegations of significant liability, including personal injury, property damage, breach of contract, shareholder derivative actions and allegations of personal liability for business defaults. He has handled major products liability actions, with significant damage claims, for a propane gas distributor, a tractor trailer manufacturer, and a forklift manufacturer.

Matt's commercial and complex litigation clients include local, state, national and international businesses in nearly every sector of Nevada's economy, including mining. He represents them as primary outside counsel in every phase of litigation, and out-of-state law firms also often rely on Matt to serve as local counsel. He has tried cases to arbiters, judges and juries and successfully argued before the Nevada Supreme Court.
