Education

B.S., Health Ecology, University of Nevada, Reno

Lindsay Knox is a valuable resource for clients with interests in Nevada, advocating on their behalf and monitoring legislation and regulation to identify potential opportunities and issues. She helps clients define objectives, develop a comprehensive strategy, and create an action plan that offers the greatest potential for success. A life-long resident of Nevada, Lindsay is well known throughout the state.

Working with state agencies, legislators, and the Nevada Governor's office, Lindsay draws on her extensive network of contacts to make connections on behalf of her clients and help communicate and advance their legislative and policy priorities. On a local level, Lindsay skillfully manages and maintains important relationships with elected officials and their staff while closely tracking changes in the law and ordinances. Clients rely on Lindsay's expertise at all stages of the process, including advocacy, lobbying, monitoring and tracking bills, building coalitions, crafting strategy, advising on political affairs, and business development.

Lindsay has worked at McDonald Carano for more than 15 years and has experience serving clients in a broad range of industries, including homebuilding, health care, energy, technology, transportation, financial services, entertainment, retail, aviation, agriculture, real estate, and water resources. Lindsay's clients include businesses, trade associations, non-profit organizations, and local and municipal governments as well as other public agencies.

During her career, Lindsay has worked on a comprehensive scope of initiatives at the state level, including those addressing topics relating to employment, construction, data privacy, landlord/tenant, housing, elections, natural resources, workers' compensation, taxation, and health care. Her involvement in a variety of initiatives includes drafting amendments, reviewing bills, testifying before committees, and collaborating with other lobbyists.
