Professional Background

Emily Dubansky is a member of the Employment & Labor Law Practice Group and Commercial & Complex Litigation Practice Group. Her litigation practice includes trial and appellate work in state and federal courts, administrative hearings and other proceedings before regulatory agencies, and private arbitration and mediation. Ms. Dubansky's work encompasses a broad range of business litigation, with a specific focus on representation of insurers and employers in workers' compensation claims. She has worked on numerous petitions for judicial review related to workers' compensation claims, including those involving matters of first impression with respect to Nevada's workers' compensation statutes and regulations. She has assisted with workers' compensation appeals up to the level of the Nevada Supreme Court.

She has also assisted with matters involving labor and employment, insurance coverage and bad faith, government investigations and enforcement actions, and securities class actions and derivative actions.

Ms. Dubansky previously served as a law clerk for Judge Marvin J. Garbis of the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland, and Judge Anthony W. Ishii of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of California. She also practiced as a litigator in San Francisco, focusing on white collar defense and commercial litigation matters.
