Emily Dubansky is a member of the Employment & Labor Law Practice and Commercial & Complex Litigation Practice. Her litigation practice includes trial and appellate work in state and federal courts, administrative hearings and other proceedings before regulatory agencies, and private arbitration and mediation.

Ms. Dubansky's experience includes a broad range of business litigation with a special focus on representing insurers and employers in workers' compensation claims. She has worked on numerous petitions for judicial review related to workers' compensation claims, including matters of first impression regarding Nevada's workers' compensation statutes and regulations. She has assisted with workers' compensation appeals up to the Nevada Supreme Court.

She has also assisted with matters involving labor and employment, insurance coverage and bad faith, government investigations and enforcement actions, and securities class actions and derivative actions.

Ms. Dubansky previously served as a law clerk for Judge Marvin J. Garbis of the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland, and Judge Anthony W. Ishii of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of California. She also practiced as a litigator in San Francisco, focusing on white collar defense and commercial litigation matters.
